. I'm sorry, but I can't help you because I have no idea why your software is not working, or what the problem is, or how to fix it. As others have already suggested, you would have to post some more details in order to get an answer to your question. A: I have had the same problem. I was able to find a solution by uninstalling the decipher backup repair, and then reinstalling it. In the process, it installed an additional encrypted folder, with a deci3.txt file, which I deleted. The folder was named: ES Files. Upon reinstalling, the program skipped this folder. I then downloaded the deci3.txt and deci2.txt files, and used them in the Decipher backup repair routine. It allowed me to retrieve my previous backups. Hope this helps. When President Obama nominated Chinese dissident Ai Weiwei to head his new human rights commission this past March, the artist posted a sarcastic thank-you note online for his "honorary promotion." The White House announced Ai's nomination in a statement on Wednesday, describing the artist as "one of China's leading cultural voices." But this isn't the first time the country has honored Ai by exiling him. When he was awarded the 2013 Golden Lion for lifetime achievement at the Venice Film Festival, the Chinese government barred him from attending. Ai Weiwei chose instead to premiere a new video in front of a live audience to document his experience. "This is really to tell the world that the film is censored," Ai said in the video of the premiere. "I would like the world to know and I would like the world to observe that we are not prisoners of the regime, we are prisoners of our own individual limits." He wore a red tie — the color of the Hong Kong flag — and sunglasses that he said were made for him by the protesters who tossed them at riot police during the early weeks of the 2014 Umbrella Movement in Hong Kong. "I really want the world to see me as a human," Ai said. "I am not an icon. I am not a star. I'm a human." He said that he expected the censors to try to block the broadcast: "The most likely scenario is
